

Geoffrey F. Gresh

Professor of International Security Studies at the College of International Security
Affairs (CISA), National Defense University

Geoffrey F. Gresh is Professor of International Relations at the College of International Security Affairs (CISA), National Defense University in Washington, D.C. with a primary research focus on maritime and naval affairs. Prior to CISA, he was a Visiting Fellow at Sciences Po in Paris and was the recipient of a Dwight D. Eisenhower/Clifford Roberts Fellowship. He also received a U.S. Fulbright-Hays Grant to teach international relations at Salahaddin University in Erbil, Iraq. He has been awarded a Rotary Ambassadorial Scholarship to Istanbul, Turkey and a Presidential Scholarship at the American University in Cairo, Egypt. Most recently, he was named as a Hitachi-Council on Foreign Relations International Affairs Fellow, a Visiting Researcher at the National Graduate Research Institute for Policy Studies in Tokyo, a U.S.-Japan Foundation Leadership Fellow, an Associate Member of the Corbett Centre for Maritime Policy Studies at King's College in London, and as a life member to the Council on Foreign Relations.

He is the author or editor of several books, including To Rule Eurasia's Waves: The New Great Power Competition at Sea (Yale University Press), U.S. Foreign Policy in the Middle East: From American Missionaries to the Islamic State (Routledge), Eurasia's Maritime Rise and Global Security: From the Indian Ocean to Pacific Asia and the Arctic (Palgrave Macmillan), and Gulf Security and the U.S. Military: Regime Survival and the Politics of Basing (Stanford University Press). He has also published widely in other peer-reviewed and other policy relevant journal or publishing outlets, in addition to being the book series editor for Palgrave Studies in Maritime Politics and Security. His forthcoming book, Leaning Seaward: Japan as Maritime Great Power is due out in 2025. He received his BA in French and History from Lafayette College in Easton, PA and his MALD and PhD in International Relations from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University.

